The Mishna records that during the period of the Second Temple the Ten Commandments were recited daily, [68] before the reading of the Shema Yisrael as preserved, for example, in the Nash Papyrus Hebrew manuscript fragment from - BCE found in Egypt, containing a version of the ten commandments and the beginning of the Shema ; but that this practice was abolished in the synagogues so as not to give ammunition to heretics who claimed that they were the only important part of Jewish law, [69] [70] or to dispute a claim by early Christians that only the Ten Commandments were handed down at Mount Sinai rather than the whole Torah. And, third, there was too much extravagance in the early days of the commune when rice was eaten three times a day without cheaper foodstuffs being used.
